Michael Kline

Jeffcoat Pottery is pleased to announce their winter workshop with ceramic artist, Michael Kline. Michael has been a studio potter since 1993. After 3 years of civil engineering studies at the University of Tennessee, Michael stumbled into a ceramics class. In his own words Michael describes this momentous event.

“A good friend, who was in art school, invited me to the clay studio for a raku firing (read:party). I remember watching the teacher throw a pot. Like many who see this “magic” act, I was beyond fascinated, maybe even hypnotized. That night I made a pinch pot in the shape of an egg, which I still have. The clay had me in a spell! But for the moment I would return to engineering school, soon to drop out from a lack of interest and poor grades. A year or so later, I was encouraged by a good friend to take a pottery class that they heard was a lot of fun. I remembered seeing the potter at the wheel, and remembered that I wanted to try that myself. That first night of my pottery class, the first touch of the clay, I knew I was in love.”

Michael went on to study pottery, painting, and printmaking at UTK and holds a BFA. He also studied under Michael Simon at the Penland School of Crafts in 1989 and later with Mark Shapiro in Worthington, MA. In 1993, Michael began his business and created wood fired-salt glazed tableware until in 1998, when he was awarded a Resident Artist position at Penland, working on larger scale stoneware.

In 2015 he built an atmospheric vapor/soda kiln which is his current obsession. He also began a completely new body of stamped and inlaid stoneware inspired by the Korean tradition called “Sanggam”.

Michael has written numerous articles, had his work published in many books, and presents workshops across the country. He lives in Bakersville, NC and is married to goldsmith, Stacey Lane. They have two daughters, Evelyn and Lillian.

In this 2-day, demonstration workshop, Michael will be throwing a variety of forms, including a plate with a cut rim and a two-part pot. He will demonstrate making handles as well as various styles of brushwork. He will conduct a discussion/demo of dividing space on flatware as well as volumetric pots and designing appropriate pattern strategies and sequences for slips, glazes, and wax resists. He will also show his ideas for designing stamped and carved patterns on pots that he will inlay with porcelain. Finally, he will demo how he hybridizes traditional brushwork and traditional Korean inlay techniques using his own, unique style.
